Senator Bradley and Representative Cobb Host a Meeting of Oral Health Stakeholders

About 40 representatives from various organizations, policy makers, government agencies, and lobbyists gathered at the Capitol on June 29th to hear updates on the legislative session just ended and to begin to plan for next session. AzDHA has been participating in this stakeholder group since its inception in 2013. Some of the topics discussed included the Arizona Oral Health Plan, Arizona Oral Health Coalition workgroups which includes AHCCCS dental benefits for adult pregnant women and teledentistry, funding issues experienced by the Arizona Indian tribes, water fluoridation in Tucson, and challenges faced by individuals with developmental disabilities due to the $1,000 benefit cap on dental services that includes charges for general anesthesia. Attendees with common advocacy goals were able to make connections as a result of this meeting. The group will meet again in December to discuss specific legislation that will be introduced. If you have an interest in advocacy and want to learn more about the efforts of AzDHA, please contact Deb Kappes at dkappes.azdha@gmail.com

American Journal of Public Health Releases Special Issue on Oral Health

The American Journal of Public Health released a special oral health supplement exploring oral health inequities and the need to diversify the health work force with additional providers including dental therapists. Henrie Monteith Treadwell, PhD, guest editor for the supplement writes, "This special issue—through scholarly articles addressing oral health inequities, vulnerable populations (e.g., the incarcerated and elderly), provider diversity, policy development, public health practice, and research—embraces a belief that protection of the public's health must include access to affordable and preventive oral health care services for everyone" (doi: 10.2105/AJPH.2017.303957).
