Millennials, Meet the Boomers Generational Considerations in Rendering Comprehensive Oral Health Care (3 CE)

Betsy Reynolds, RDH, MS

In order to better understand how formative experiences such as world events or technological changes shape the ways people see, interact and are affected by our ever-changing world, demographers classify generations based on a range of birth years. The baby-boomer generation includes those people born between 1946 and 1964. Due to their sheer numbers, baby boomers dominated American culture for decades. Everything from the economy to popular music has been shaped by this group from the moment they were born. As they age, baby boomers will continue to shape the U.S. economy, and with longer life expectancies, baby boomers are not just living longer, they are remaining active and working longer. Officially defined as those people born between 1981 and 1996, millennials are quickly becoming the biggest worldwide population cohort and one that will shape much of what the future holds in the areas of communication, business, entertainment, and health care. Much can be learned from both of these generations! Come prepared to laugh and learn as we explore these two diverse generations.

Following this presentation, course participants will be able to:

- Recognize differences in communication styles that impact patient education strategies.
- Understand oral and systemic ramifications of today's lifestyle trends in boomers and millennials.
- Incorporate age appropriate oral healthcare recommendations.
- Devise appropriate treatment strategies based on generational needs.
